PREFACE

This report is produced by the United States Department of Agriculture with the cooperation of Agriculture Canada and Servicio Nacional de Informacion de Mercados of Mexico. It is published twice weekly and includes preliminary import volume data which is subject to correction as final data are received. Prices as shown for Bulgaria, Canada, Colombia, England, France, Germany, Japan, Mexico, The Netherlands and Poland are converted to U.S. currency, based upon the published New York foreign exchange rate as quoted at 3 p.m. Eastern Time on the date of the information shown.

The preliminary volume data as shown in the shipment, border crossings and import section are by commodities and origins on a crop season basis. Seasons commence with the first shipments of anew crop with most commodities having a different shipping period per origin. COMMODITY HIGHLIGHTS

MEXICAN TRENDS For the week of October 4 - 8, 2004

CITRUS FRUITS

Limes

Demand for Mexican limes hasn't been all that dynamic, which is primarily due to climate conditions and the rainy weather that has prevailed in the City of Mexico and large portions of the country. Furthermore, supply levels have remained consistent and sufficient enough to satisfy consumer demand. Both factors have prompted reductions in the price, reaching a level that is affordable and that presently happens to be 19.8% below what it was a year ago. Harvesting in Apatzingan, Michoacan is presently in its middle phase and sufficient volumes of this citrus fruit are likely to be distributed within the next two weeks, which is why no significant variations are expected to be noted in the price. Lately, however, the weather appears to have improved, which is also a contributing factor.

In the meantime, rains have occurred in Veracruz within the past two weeks, and even though they haven't been intense throughout the northern part of the state, they have still interfered with cropping activities, reducing supply levels to a certain extent. Because of this, the price has risen slightly. However, supply levels remain satisfactory, on the whole, which is why the price of Persian limes is still affordable and is presently being marketed at a level that is 17.8% below what it was a year ago. Significant volumes are produced in Martinez de la Torre, Veracruz at this time of the year, which is why the price will most likely stay somewhat stable during the next fifteen days.

Oranges

During the past week, higher volumes of the "Early" crop of oranges have started arriving from Veracruz, now that harvesting has reached its peak phase. Furthermore, significant volumes of the Current crops produced in Tabasco, and to a lesser extent, in Yucatan, are also arriving, which is why supply levels have improved a bit. The prices have also dropped, reaching levels that are affordable, and that on average, happen to be 6% below what they were a year ago. It should be noted that consistent levels are expected to continue arriving from these states, which is why prices are likely to drop within the next two weeks.

MELONS

Cantaloupes

As predicted, consumption of Cantaloupe melons decreased noticeably when the price increased, contributed by the cold and rainy weather in the City of Mexico. Because of this, the price has stabilized, yet it still happens to be rather elevated and is presently 60.1% above what it was a year ago. Chihuahua happens to be the primary supplier at the moment, and significant crop areas remain to be harvested. If precipitation diminishes within the next coming week, and harvesting progresses without any interference, supplies could improve to a certain extent. As long as early frosts don't affect crops and volumes are distributed regularly, the price will most likely remain somewhat stable, or perhaps even drop slightly, particularly since consumer demand has diminished.

Watermelons

The price of prime quality Sangria watermelons has continued falling during the past four weeks because, on the one hand, consistent and satisfactory wholesale volumes are being shipped from Chihuahua, along with regular batches that are coming from Baja California, and, secondly, because consumer demand has diminished in response to the rainy and colder weather. Because of these reasons, the price has dropped to an affordable level that presently happens to be 9.2% below what it was a year ago. During the next fifteen days, the price is expected to fluctuate around its present level since supplies aren't likely to improve noticeably during the interim.

NON-CITRUS FRUITS

Apples

Harvesting of apples in Chihuahua is ending, which is why a large proportion of the ones picked have already been sent to refrigerated storage facilities in order to be distributed in the ensuing months. Nevertheless, significant quantities of the ones harvested never reach their optimum size or grade and these tend to be shipped directly to markets and priced accordingly and more affordably for consumers. In the meantime, the price of "select" or prime quality apples has stabilized, although, on average, they presently happen to be 3.1% above what they were a year ago due to frosts that have affected the quality of significant portions of the fruit. Nonetheless, prices are still considered affordable and are expected to remain stable during the next fifteen days.

Avocados

Currently predominant in the marketplace are the “crazy” crop of Hass avocados that are generally produced during the intermediate phase of harvesting in Michoacan, before production of the new crop in that state. Furthermore, considerable volumes of the advanced crop of avocados are also being supplied. In sum, domestic supply levels have remained consistent and satisfactory, which is why few significant shifts have been noted in the price of the better quality product. Nevertheless, it presently happens to be 18.1% above what it was a year ago. It’ll be necessary to wait and see whether shipments continue arriving regularly once harvesting formalizes in that state, and this being the case, the price will most likely remain somewhat stable during the next fifteen days.

Bananas

Supplies of Bananas have arrived regularly, without being all that abundant, while still being sufficient enough to meet the current demand. Because of this, the price has stabilized at an affordable level, yet still happens to be 32.9% above what it was a year ago. This is primarily due to the lower temperatures registered within the past fifteen days, conditions that are delaying the development and maturation of the fruit. Since production in Chiapas and Tabasco tends to generally be in its medium phase at this time of the year, consistent volumes are expected to continue arriving from these states and no significant variations are likely to be noted in the price within the next fifteen days, unless low temperatures happen to persist or intensify during the interim.

In the meantime, the price of Plantains has risen slightly within the past two weeks due to the reduction of supply levels and the slower development of the fruit as of the colder weather now prevalent in Chiapas, Veracruz and Oaxaca - the traditional suppliers of this variety. Despite all of this, the supply appears to be satisfactory, which is why the price has stayed stable and at a level that is presently 7.9% below what it was a year ago. No significant variations are likely to be noted within the next two weeks, unless weather conditions worsen.

Papayas

As predicted, the shipments of Maradol papayas coming from Oaxaca, Yucatan, Tabasco and Chiapas, in conjunction with one another, have allowed supply levels to be deemed ample, which is rather atypical at this time of the year since production usually tends to be in its lowest phase between the months of July through October. Given the fact that crop surfaces have increased within the past few years, supplies are actually sufficient while consumer demand has diminished due to the rainy and colder weather. For these reasons, the price has dropped slightly, reaching a level that is affordable and that presently happens to be 27.9% below what it was a year ago. As long as climate conditions don’t interfere with harvesting, sufficient volumes are expected to be shipped from these states within the next two weeks allowing the price to remain at its current affordable level.

Pineapples

Heavy rains have been observed in the State of Veracruz within the past two weeks, particularly in the central and southern parts of the state, which has made it difficult to cut and transport pineapples from the region of Villa Isla, the primary supplier of this fruit. Consequently, reduced supplies have been noted in the City of Mexico’s central produce market, which is why the price has risen slightly within the past two weeks. It should be noted, however, that the price of the medium-sized fruit is actually 24.6% below what it was a year ago, and that normally, at this time of the year, the low phase of production associated with the months of July through September tends to end. Should weather conditions improve, supplies will most likely recover allowing the price to remain somewhat stable during the next two weeks.

VEGETABLES

Carrots

Within the past week, the price of medium-sized carrots – which is the one predominantly marketed – has risen slightly, reaching a level that is presently 15.6% above what it was a year ago. The behavior has to do with the reduced supply given the fact that harvesting in Puebla and Queretaro has now entered its final phase. In the meantime, harvesting in the State of Mexico, which will eventually become the primary supplier, has only just commenced. In general, prices are slightly higher than they were a year ago, however, once harvesting formalizes in Mexico, supply levels are expected to improve allowing the prices to stabilize, as well.

Pepper

After decreasing several times during the past month, the price of prime quality Serrano peppers has risen slightly because even though the last phase of harvesting in Tamaulipas is in progress, labor activities have been interrupted by rains. Nevertheless, supply levels are deemed sufficient since lesser volumes are also coming from Morelos, Mexico, and more recently from Chihuahua, as well. Because of this, the price has stayed affordable, at a level that is presently 28.1% below what it was a year ago. Tamaulipas is an important supplier of this variety and if weather conditions improve within the next fifteen days, supply levels are likely to be consistent, allowing the price to remain stable during the interim.

Normally, at this time of the year, the State of Michoacan is the primary supplier of good quality Poblano peppers and because volumes aren’t all that significant, the price has been pushed upwards. In effect, supply levels are somewhat scarce, which is why the price has risen, reaching an elevated level that is presently 36.4% above what it was a year ago.

Furthermore, it should be mentioned that Zacatecas and San Luis Potosi supply some poorer quality batches that are priced more affordably. In the meantime, Michoacan is expected to distribute higher volumes within the next two weeks, which is why the price will either remain somewhat stable, or perhaps even drop slightly.

In the meantime, the price of the Jalapeno pepper is the only one of its kind to have decreased because supply levels are deemed satisfactory now that harvesting has formalized in Michoacan, while significant volumes of poorer quality peppers are also coming from Chihuahua. Due to the abundant supply, the price of the better quality ones has remained affordable, at a level that is presently 4.2% below what it was a year ago, and it will most likely remain this way throughout the next fifteen days.

Squash (Zucchini)

With respect to zucchini, supply levels have diminished within the past few days, which are basically because lower temperatures have been delaying the maturation of this vegetable, while rains in some areas have interfered with harvesting activities. Due to these reasons, the price has risen significantly, reaching a level that is elevated and that presently happens to be 17.5% above what it was a year ago. It should be mentioned that volumes are being shipped from Hidalgo, Mexico, Puebla and Morelos, states that are likely to continue supplying quantities during the next fifteen days. In the meantime, consumer demand appears to be diminishing, which could prevent the price from rising further.

Tomato

Supply levels of Saladette tomatoes remain limited, particularly of the good quality ones. As already mentioned, this is due to two reasons. In the first place, volumes have diminished because of rains and frosts that have caused damages to crops in San Luis Potosi and Zacatecas. Furthermore, crops in the first state have been plagued by a parasite known as peristalsis. And, secondly, the primary supplier has become Baja California where harvesting is between the final phase of its last crop and the initiation of harvesting of the new crops. Additionally, large proportions of the ones harvested in that state tend to be exported. Even though harvesting in Morelos has commenced within the past two weeks, volumes haven't been significant enough to prompt reductions in the price. In the meantime, the price is rather elevated and is presently 52.3% above what it was a year ago. It should be noted that the first batches from Sayula, Jalisco and Yurecuaro, Michoacan have started arriving, and these could help in maintaining the price somewhat stable, or perhaps even dropping slightly within the next fifteen days. Nevertheless, this rather depends on whether rains that have recently occurred in these areas haven't affected crops in any noticeable manner.

With respect to vineripe tomatoes, supplies have been rather scarce within the past few weeks, however, it has become more acute due to the limited availability of the other variety, and particularly when none of the others were delivered to the marketplace. This is due to several reasons. In the first place, production in Baja California is presently in midstream, between the end of harvesting the last crop, and the initiation of the new crops. Furthermore, significant volumes of the ones being harvested are being exported to the United States and are commanding higher prices. Furthermore, it should be noted that regular consumers of this variety, such as restaurants, hotels and hamburger establishments, etc., do not substitute this variety with the Saladette tomatoes, which is why the price of the vineripe variety has risen significantly, reaching a level that is extremely elevated and that presently happens to be 91% above what it was a year ago. While some limited volumes are also coming from the State of Mexico, along with the first batches starting to arrive from Michoacan, it isn't until harvesting formalizes in Sayula, Michoacan that adjustments in the price are likely to be noted, probably sometime after the next two weeks.

ONIONS AND POTATOES

Onions

Supplies of white onions aren't all that ample, at present, because crops have in Chihuahua have been affected by the rainy season, this being one of the primary suppliers. Nevertheless, considerable volumes have been shipped from there within the past week, and coupled with the regular shipments coming from Baja California, the price of the prime quality ones has dropped within the past week. While the price seems relatively elevated, it's actually only 4.5% above what it was a year ago. Considerable crop areas remain to be harvested in both of these states and if weather conditions stay favorable during the next fifteen days, both the supply level and the price are likely to remain stable. It should also be noted that significant quantities of poorer quality onions happen to be readily available and priced more affordably.

Potatoes (White)

Harvesting of white potatoes in Saltillo, Coahuila is starting to decline, however, considerable volumes are still being distributed along with the significant quantities also coming from the State of Mexico, where harvesting is initiating. Furthermore, batches are also coming from Puebla, Tlaxcala and Veracruz. In sum, supplies happen to be satisfactory and the price of the prime quality ones hasn't varied all that much and still happens to be affordable, at a level that is presently 16.7% below what it was a year ago. Supply levels from the first state are expected to diminish during the next fifteen days, however, those from the State of Mexico are likely to increase, which is why supplies will probably remain somewhat stable allowing the price to fluctuate around its present level.
