Central and East low/medium heat nonfat dry milk (NDM) prices shifted lower at the tops of the range and mostly series this week, holding steady at the bottom ends of the respective series. High heat NDM prices remain steady. Low/medium heat NDM availability is somewhat firm in the Midwest, according to contacts. They say Eastern supplies, in a somewhat atypical week, are more available, and Eastern trading activity was a little busier this week. Condensed skim availability is growing. Contacts say processing plant downtime and upticks in farm milk production are catalysts for the growth in spot skim supplies and decreases on skim pricing. Despite price downticks, market tones are more steady than bearish. High heat NDM prices are unchanged on slower reported trading activity. High heat demand has been somewhat hearty over the past few weeks, but processing is generally based on contractual needs.
