Direct Hay Weighted Average Report for week ending 5/13/2022

Volume
This Week	Last Reported ()	Last Year

Please Note: The above volumes (tonnage, acres, and bales) listed on this USDA LPGMN report are for confirmed trades only, it does not include estimated volume (tonnage) for bids or offers to the trade.

Compared to the last report: Hay prices remain mostly firm in all regions. Demand for hay remains very good as moisture deficits have been recorded in much of the state. Some beneficial rains fell across North, Central, and South Texas. However, areas across the Coastal Bend, Panhandle, and West Texas remain extremely dry. The entire state is experiencing hotter than average temperatures coupled with high winds, which is further depreddating soil moisture conditions. Hay production has gotten off to a slow start due to persistent drought across most of the state. However, first cutting of irrigated crops in South Texas are under way. According to John Nielsen-Gammon, Ph.D., state climatologist in the College of Geosciences Department of Atmospheric Sciences at Texas A&M University, May and June are typically the wettest months of the year in Texas, so even if we get less than average rainfall over those months, we still may get enough to help with agricultural production.

Due to limited sales and price changes this report will be released bi-weekly until more volumes of hay is moving.
 The next report release will be May 27th
