Compared to last week, steers and heifers sold 3.00 to 8.00 lower instances up to 10.00 lower in most areas this week, however the North Central states were unevenly steady. Feedyards took money off orders this week as areas that were snowy last week have awfully muddy pen conditions. Prior to the large snowstorm that moved across the Plains last week, temperatures had not been cold enough to get the ground frozen before the snow flew from the sky. The snow acted as a blanket and left the unfrozen ground below it and as cattle moved across the pens, churned the white moisture into a maligned muddy mess. Feedyard managers have the unenviable task to try and make cattle as comfortable in the mess left by Mother Nature. Cattle are getting tired of slogging through the mud and have expended more calories than they can eat in a day. Daily gains are greatly affected and those cattle that are in the latest stages of finish will have expected out date adjusted. More feed cost put into fed cattle are never a welcome sight this close to the projected out date. In addition to weather issues in the North, the South is expected to ...
