Losing Weight and Keeping It Off-it can be done

While people lose weight all the time, keeping it off seems to be the difficult part. The National Weight Control Registry (NWCR) was established in 1994, not to help people lose weight, but rather to study adults who had already dropped 30 pounds or more and kept it off for one year.

Need for a lifestyle change

The NWCR has tracked more than 5,000 participants who have beaten the odds of regaining lost weight and all said the key to their successful weight loss was to stop thinking of weight loss as dieting and instead think of it as a lifestyle change. Participants lost weight in a variety of ways, but to keep it off, researchers found they had key things in common—a commitment to a low-calorie, low-fat diet and a high level of physical activity.

How successful dieters avoid regaining those lost pounds

The registry's studies reveal key behaviors shared by these participants. Here are some of the behavioral trends noted among those successful in maintaining weight loss:

Lose weight to improve health

According to Suzanne Phelan, co-investigator with the registry and Assistant Professor at Brown University, motivation counts. She notes, "People with medical triggers (such as diabetes and heart conditions) are more successful over time."

Change both diet and activity levels

The specifics of members' methods varied widely, but 90% stepped up their exercise and improved eating habits at the same time. They are an active group. Walking is their most common fitness activity, followed by weight lifting, bicycling, and aerobic exercise. Most importantly, they keep up their exercise even after losing the weight.

Eat more often

Most registry members eat five times a day, which usually means breakfast, lunch, dinner, and two between-meal snacks.

Follow the diet consistently

Stick to what got you there. People regain weight when they eat a little more on the weekend than they do on weekdays or ease up on exercise or stop weighing themselves because they reached their goal or feel down. Those who stick to their diet regimen seven days a week maintain their losses better.

Monitor progress

Monitoring food intake and tracking success can be encouraging as well as helpful. Patients need to become aware of patterns that are problematic in order to change what isn't working. Most participants continue to follow a healthful diet even after losing weight.

Nip a small weight gain in the bud

Successful dieters catch a small weight gain (one or two pounds) and turn it around quickly. They make sure they continue to follow the steps that helped them achieve their weight loss and maintain it.

Stay upbeat

Staying upbeat seems to be a trait also shared by successful dieters.

Watch less television

Of the registry participants, 64% watch no more than 10 hours weekly, compared with 28 hours for the average American.

Eat breakfast

Almost 80% of those successful participants eat breakfast seven days a week. Most typical, was cereal with skim milk and fruit.

Sometimes feelings of sadness can spur one to ignore their diet and overeat. A positive outlook combined with constructive goal setting can help one achieve and maintain their healthy weight.

Those who continue to be successful at maintaining their loss find that it gets easier and that the reward for remaining vigilant in the long run is much greater than the short-term gratification of indulging.

Every individual is different and will experience different results when following the Slim-Fast Plan. If you want to lose weight and are under 18, pregnant, nursing, following a diet recommended by a doctor, have health problems or want to lose more than 30 pounds, see a doctor before starting the Slim-Fast Plan or any diet. Do not lose more than two pounds per week after the first week. Rapid weight loss may cause health problems. Also, do not use Slim-Fast as a sole source of nutrition and eat at least 1,200 calories per day.

filling up on fluids

The days are now longer, and the sun is starting to keep us outdoors more. With the warmer weather coming, you may begin enjoying more recreational activities. It's easier to exercise and spend time working outside in the garden. Toiling in the heat may cause you to sweat more, and just like clockwork, you reach for fluids to replenish any losses. But, wait! Liquids may contain calories too, and we know that excess calories cause weight gain over time. So, which fluids are good for weight control?

If we rank them by importance, plain water rests at the top. Right out of the tap, it's inexpensive and convenient. If your water has an off-odor or taste, refrigerate it or buy a pitcher with a filtering device. Replace the filter as per the manufacturer's recommendations because leaving it in the pitcher too long may result in an overgrowth of organisms.

Apart from tap or home-filtered water, it's okay to buy bottled water. Avoid the bottled waters with vitamins, minerals and herbal products added to them. These are too costly for the amount of nutrients you get and you would be better off buying a standard multivitamin.

Next on the list is flavored water. These are great alternatives for people who dislike the taste of plain water and usually they contain zero or negligible calories. Ingredients should be listed as water and some type of flavoring—such as orange, raspberry or lime—and that's it. If you see calories on the nutrition facts label, skip that brand and move to the next. Furthermore, if the label says sugar, corn syrup, or honey, put back that product too. The flavored seltzers are quite satisfying without any sugar added.

Sports drinks are an alternative for elite athletes, like long distance runners, or people playing vigorous sports. Unless you are expending a great deal of energy and sweating profusely for hours, most likely you don't need a sports drink. And besides, they are sweetened and contain a lot of calories.
