For information on Canadian certified operations, see the Canadian Food Inspection Agency website. Since products certified to the USDA organic regulations and the Canadian Organic Regime may be sold as organic in both countries, Canadian operations no longer need to maintain certification to the USDA in order to sell organic products in the U.S. The only Canadian operations listed here are those which produce products that are not eligible for Canadian certification, such as pet food.

Operations certified under international trade agreements, also known as Recognition Agreements, do not appear on this list.

Accredited Certifying Agents

Eighty certifying agents are currently USDA-accredited and authorized to certify operations to the USDA organic standards. Of these, 48 are based in the U.S. and 32 are based in foreign countries. Most certifying agents are directly accredited by the USDA National Organic Program (NOP). Twenty-one additional certifying agents are authorized through recognition agreements between the U.S. and foreign governments.

Each of these certifying agents is authorized to issue an organic certificate to operations that comply with the USDA organic regulations. When selecting a certifying agent, you may wish to consider the following criteria:

- Fee structure
- Distance to your farm or business
- Authorization to certify you to export organic products to Taiwan and Japan (pdf)

To help you find a certifying agent, we have provided the list of certifying agents by name, by U.S. state, and by country. Most NOP-accredited certifying agents may certify farms and businesses anywhere in the world. These lists provide information on locations where accredited certifying agents have recently provided certification services. Please contact individual certifying agents for more information.

Using the Data

- Trends analysis for outreach – where is the number of certified organic operations declining, in a particular sector?
  - Can help ensure future raw commodity supplies.
- Identification of producers to provide pricing information for Market News

Using the Data

- NASS Organic Certifiers Survey (2014 & 2015)
  - Certified Organic Acreage & Livestock Report
  - Data can be submitted through INTEGRITY now, but won't be pulled from the system until the 2016 Certifier Organic Certifiers Survey
  - Current approach will duplicate future efforts and introduce unnecessary respondent burden
  - Training and communication with certifiers is paramount in making this transition successful

Questions about the Data?

If you have questions about an operation's profile in the INTEGRITY database, contact the Certifier directly. They will have the most up to date and detailed information.

Next Steps

- We are working closely with certifiers to ensure accurate and timely data
- Web services for public data sharing are coming soon. Information will be provided on the system's About page as it becomes available
- Development continues..... We welcome your feedback!
